

Abstract of the Disclosure

A method and device for reducing vibratory noise in a system with an integral rotating member includes independently operable drive means for controlling the angular velocity of at least two masses. Control signals manipulate the drive means to allow each mass to rotate at optimal speed, direction and phase for reducing the noise induced in the system by the rotating member.